A conference on civil aviation safety in Israel and new developments in the : כותרת:

Newscastr: A conference on civil aviation safety in Israel and new developments in the field is being held in Herzliya today. The gathering is organized by the Fisher Institute and the Civil Aviation Authority. Jackie Biochem .reports Jackie Biochem: Following yesterday's closure of Ben Gurion Airport for several hours due to the fog, it must be a strange coincidence that today's conference discusses ,such topics as runway upgrading, a new air-navigation law safety reviews, aviation agreements, environmentally efficient aviation and aircrew fatigue management. Brigadier-general Assaf Agmon - Head of the Fisher Institute for Air and Space Strategic Studies - says that yesterday's closure

.happens in airports the world over Assaf Agmon: Yesterday it was an exceptional phenomenon which most of the airports around the world would be closed as well. Uh, you should know, and the audience should know, that even if the electronically and the instrument landing system and board man would be operating, it will not change the situation yesterday among of the aircrafts of the airline would be able to land because the weather was 50 meters visibility, 50 meters of visibility, which is unable to civilization airplanes to land Jackie Biochem: But I believe that another report says they have the facilities to, with the special equipments, to see !less than 50 meters. Am I correct Assaf Agmon: Very, very, uh, very very few airports in the world have this facility and, I believe, that in country like Israel, with our weather, it's something of luxuries, and it's not something that necessary. It's a lot of money to invest it on the airfield, it's a lot of money to invest, not every aircraft is capable to do it. And very few pilots is capable to do it, so it was, uh, not convenient. The 25 aircrafts had to land in Larmaka, in Najeva airports in the... , but I ,don't think this is a major event in aviation. It's, actually when you look at Europe and at the States and other countries in the world, it's natural phenomenon in aviation It's from time to time airports are closed due to weather and in Israel we are lucky to have very very few days

.like this during the year

Jackie Biochem: As a reaction to yesterday's airport closure, newspaper headlines today question whether Israel's civil air-industry is still at third world standards. Agmon .disagrees

Assaf Agmon: I think Israel has a very advanced aviation industry, on one end. On the other end - for many, many years we did not, we have not done all the regulations and all the procedures that are necessary by modern aviation. And the Israeli Aviation Authority is trying to .improve all these things

Jackie Biochem: Do you think Eliezer Shkedi, who is the manager-director of El Al, is right when he says that we need another airport

Assaf Agmon: Certainly we need an alternative or another civil airport as an alternate Ben Gurion. We need to have such an airport. I believe that one of the, of the solutions or one of the options is to build a new airport in the south of Israel, what they call - airport in Timna. It's something that all the planning was finalized and only they are waiting for decision, a government decision, to go ahead for this solution. I believe that this is the best .solution for the Israeli civil aviation Jackie Biochem: Brigadier-general Assaf Agmon - from the .Fisher Institute and this is Jackie Biochem, reporting
