Newscaster: Two of the experiments performed by Israeli astronaut Ilan Ramon on the Columbia spacecraft will be repeated on the space shuttle Endeavor's next flight scheduled for next week. One experiment will test the endurance and reproductive powers of pro-biotic bacteria in weightless conditions for mixing them into the food given to astronauts on extended flights. The second experiment will try to determine why the disintegration of bone cells in weightless conditions is ten times greater than on the earth's surface. While Israel is paying for the preparation of the experiments, the United States is paying for the cost of taking them into space.
